The Reids Grove Depot has a large shed-roof front dormer with ribbon windows with 4/1 lights. The roof extends beyond the house walls, and the south side has been enclosed to enlarge the structure. On the main facade there are two entry doors and a bay window on the south. The building has had its roof raised to accommodate bedrooms above the store, and parts of the flanking overhanging roof have been enclosed, but the front portion of the overhang remains and is supported by bold stick-style brackets. According to the current resident, her parents altered the building in order to make it into a dwelling. From the exterior, evidence of the roof change can be detected by a slump in the unusually long roof eave on the south side of the structure. It appears that this extension was able to incorporate the addition with a door on the south end. Furthermore, the bungalow style of the addition - the low-pitched side gable roof and the windows - the 3/1 sash, ribbon-type windows, are more typical of the 1900-1925 period.

Outbuildings

In a photograph taken prior to 1972, there were two gas pumps in front of the depot. Since that time, one has been removed.

To the northwest of the old Reids Grove Depot is a large barn. The lower portion is concrete block and the upper portion is frame. Its datestone indicates that it was constructed in 1933, just a few years after the former Depot was moved to its present location.

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

Railroad transportation came to Dorchester County in 1869 with the construction of the Salisbury Line of the Dorchester and Delaware Railroad (later the Baltimore and Eastern Line). The railroad tracks still run through the village of Reids Grove at their original location just east of and parallel to Maryland Route 331. The railroad does not appear to have played a significant role in the development of a village center at this locus. Although a passenger depot was located at Reids Grove, it appears to have been located there after the village center was established. The Reids Grove passenger depot (D-265) still exists but was moved from its original location in the village to its present site on the north or Reids Grove on the west side of Maryland Route 331 when passenger service was discontinued in 1929.

The line that passed through Reids Grove was the Salisbury Line, later changed to the Baltimore and Eastern Line, which connected the town with Baltimore and Ocean City. The small towns of Reids Grove, Rhodesdale (D-263), and others had their own passenger depots. The Reids Grove Depot was only about three miles south of the Rhodesdale Depot, which is no longer extant.

Now owned by Wilson's Farms, the Reids Grove depot was moved in 1929, from Reids Grove, where it stood on the east side of Rt. 331. At that time, rail passenger service had been discontinued on the Salisbury line, and the Wilsons moved the building and began to operate a grocery store in it. Also, the building had other functions, including a telegraph office and gas station, with two gas pumps. Today, it serves as a residence for the Wilson farm on the property.

Many rural frame passenger railroad stations originating from the fourth quarter of the nineteenth century in this region and as far north as Morris County, New Jersey had some similar architectural features. Common attributes were one-room deep plans, long overhanging eaves supported by wood brackets, and ample fenestration. Those which featured board-and-batten horizontal siding, like the former Rhodesdale Depot (D-263), were reminiscent of the Stick style that emphasized linear, textured wall surfaces. The Reids Grove Depot, before alterations, probably looked very similar to the former Rhodesdale Depot, with a front bay window next to a singled door and paired windows, and long brackets under the overhanging eaves. Also, the gable roof would have been much lower since these and other similar train stations had only a single story. Another similar example to this is found in Hurlock, Dorchester County. Situated in the center of town adjacent to the railroad tracks, this small frame depot has been restored. Its form appears to be intact, with a one-room deep plan, bay window, overhanging eaves with brackets, and a low-pitched gable roof. It is very similar to the depot recorded in East New Market as D-639. Also, at least one other late nineteenth century railroad structure is still extant near the Hurlock Depot along Poplar Street in Hurlock. Neither of the Hurlock structures have been surveyed, and a comprehensive survey of Dorchester County might find still other extant railroad stations. Hurlock, and also Cambridge, were larger towns compared to Reids Grove and Rhodesdale and could thus support more railroad facilities. Indeed, after 1885, Hurlock "grew from almost nothing to a thriving railroad town" (Weeks 1984).

The railroad station in Cambridge (D-187) is much larger than the Reids Grove depot, but its overall form is similar. The Dorchester and Delaware Railroad was completed in 1969. The line ran between Cambridge and Seaford, where it connected to a trunk line that ran to Wilmington and later Philadelphia. Railroad transportation for commercial development in the late nineteenth century was important for moving farm produce and seafood from the County (Weeks 1985:128). Indeed, its commercial role probably superseded the role of passenger transportation in Dorchester County.

To a limited extent, the Reids Grove Depot is a tangible carryover, not only of the days when passenger service was available to points north and south of Reids Grove, but of a multi-use commercial building that accommodated other community service needs. Although these other uses are interesting, they took place only after the building was first moved from its original location and then substantially altered for use as both a residence and commercial structure. While the building is in good condition and has been recycled as an historic building, its substantial alterations since its move in 1929 compromise its architectural integrity as a railroad depot. Furthermore, the depot was moved from its location in the town of Reids Grove after the first quarter of the twentieth century, which destroys the physical context and siting of the depot. Uses since that time, such as a gas station, were after its historic period of significance as a railroad station.

Research on this property indicates that the Reids Grove Depot building would not be eligible under Criteria A, B and C. Since it has been moved, it is unlikely that this structure would be potentially significant under Criterion D.
